In the Haggadah we read "Even if all of us were wise, all of us understanding, all of us knowing the Torah, we would still be obligated to discuss the exodus from Egypt; and everyone who discusses the exodus from Egypt at length is praiseworthy". Asks the Yismach Yisrael why would we even think that we should still obligated in discussing the miracle of leaving Egypt? He answers that this is due to people becoming great and potentially thinking that they don't have to continue on with the simple mentioning of the miracle. We always have to stay simple, despite how great we become. If so, why is one praised if they discuss at length? Isn't that becoming more complex, and deep? Shouldn't we keep it "simple"?

The answer can be that, we have to remain simple in the greatness. When we decide to be simple, we have to always remind ourselves to stay in the shadows of greatness. Our simple times can refer to our downfalls and "pit stops" in life, and great moments is when we grow and move on. However, when we have those inevitable "simple moments" we have to make sure that we grow from that simplicity. We should keep our focus to the rawness and simplicity that is exposed to us at those moments, and understand the underlying love that God has for us. So when we "discuss at length" the simplicity of the common knowledge of us leaving Egypt, we are in effect placing a focus on our simplicity and making that simplicity grow. That is why that person "is praised", because that is how we grow in life.

Have a beautiful Yom Tov! Happy Passover!
